Prince JOHANN ERNST Concerto in C

Tim Rishton's lively and musical playing of organ music, especially that of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, has been acclaimed by audiences and critics in most of the major European and Scandinavian centres. He has made a number of recordings, and broadcasts regularly on radio and television in several countries.

Tim Rishton studied music at the universities of Wales, Manchester and Reading, where he won all the major organ-playing prizes. After a period on the staff at Reading and Bangor universities, he went to live for two years on a small Arctic island, giving many concerts in the far North. Tim and his wife Tracy and daughter Bethan have now returned to Wales, from where he tours regularly as concert organist, recording artist, lecturer and broadcaster. His writings on music, published in journals and books on both sides of the Atlantic, have won several prizes.

Recent engagements have included major universities, colleges and cathedrals in several countries, and have ranged from Poulenc's organ concerto to eighteenth-century British concertos, and from the complete Bach organ works to a Schmidt recital at the Royal College of Organists and to contemporary Norwegian organ music at Bodø Cathedral.
