Recital by famous organist

Organist Timothy Rishton, right, is to give a recital in Shrewsbury Abbey later this year as part of a two venue tour in the county.

However, before the Abbey date in August, Timothy Rishton will be at St Oswald's Church, Oswestry, on March 7 at 7 pm.

Among pieces to be played at Oswestry will be preludes and a toccata by Bach, works by Karg-Elert and Bonnet, some variations on a Norwegian folk song and a concerto by the rarely heard composer Signor Blamr, a contemporary of Vivaldi.

Timothy Rishton studied music at the universities of Reading and Manchester.

He now holds posts at the University of Wales and is a busy recitalist throughout Britain and Northern Europe and is also organist and choirmaster at churches in Holyhead and Holy Island, Anglesey.

He specialises in music of the 17th and 18th centuries, some of which is included on his recent record. He also lectures regularly in Wales and elsewhere.
